PROSPETTO OVEST STATO ATTUALE

This is a detailed architectural line drawing of a building's exterior. The structure features a prominent gabled roof covered in red tiles. The facade is composed of a light-colored material, possibly plaster or stone, and is punctuated by a variety of window types. These include small square windows, larger multi-paned rectangular windows, and arched windows. Some windows are grouped together, while others are isolated. On the left side, a section of the building is constructed from rough-hewn stone. A small, square decorative element is visible on the roofline. The foreground shows a sloping ground plane with a low, dark, textured boundary or fence line. The drawing is executed in a clean, technical style with black outlines and flat color fills for the roof and stone.
